BRISTOL MAN FREED ON LARCENY CHARGE; SAYS HE WAS FRAMED

Beneditti Lozzi Claims Loot Was Put In His Coat Pocket

HAD GOOD CHARACTER

Numerous Witnesses Testify That Defendant Had Good Reputation

DOYLESTOWN, May 29—Using as his defense a frame-up in which, he stated, $7 and a gold watch were placed in an overcoat pocket while he left the house of a former girl friend, Beneditti Lozzi, charged with larceny and receiving stolen goods, on the stand in criminal court, here, Monday afternoon, denied before a jury and Judge Calvin S. Boyer that he stole the money and watch.

Lozzi was discharged and the costs placed on the prosecutor.

The 35-year-old stone carver, who lives at 1146 Beaver street, Bristol, testified that he was a guest in the home of Rose Pistilli on Sunday evening, January 20, when later in the evening the father discovered that some of his money and a watch alleged to have been stolen, were found in his pocket.

Victor Shelci, 1637 Latona street, Phila., the present admirer of Rose Pistilli, as a witness for the Commonwealth, testified that he was upstairs paying the mother of Rose a social call when he was asked by Nicholas Pistilli, the prosecutor, to come downstairs at once.

"When I got downstairs we searched the defendant's coat and found in a pocket seven dollars and a watch. One of the bills, which was marked with a stamp, and bearing the name of Dr. Nicholas Pistilli, was exhibited in court as evidence.

"Lozzi pleaded not to call the cops. 'Don't disgrace me,' he said. 'I'll pay whatever it is,' Shelci testified.

Rose Pistilli, another witness, testified that she heard the defendant shout: "Don't call the cops. Don't disgrace me. I will return everything I have taken."

The defendant, Lozzi, who is employed in New York City at intervals but maintains a residence in Bristol, denied that he stole the watch or the money.

Lozzi admitted that for a year and a half he contributed between $3 and $4 weekly toward the support of his fiancée's family.

In rebuttal testimony, Rose denied this assertion.

Angelo Di Renzo, Bristol contractor and builder, as a witness for the defendant, testified that he had never heard of him being in any trouble. He said Pistilli's reputation for telling the truth and veracity was bad.

Additional character witnesses for the defendant included Louis Martino, 903 Beaver street, who explained that Pistilli stated that he would settle for $300, but that the defendant refused because he wanted the case to go to court; and County Detective Anthony Russo and Chief of Police Linford Jones, both of whom testified they had never known the defendant to have been in any previous trouble.

Other witnesses for Lozzi were Gaetano Greco, Bristol realtor; Vittorio Sciarra, shoemaker; Anthony Piazza and Mrs. Sonesta Piazza, all of whom stated he bore a good reputation.

AMERICAN MEMORIALS NOW DOT ALL EUROPE

U. S. Cemeteries in France Become Beauty Spots and Attract Tourists

ARE IN VARIOUS SIZES

By International News Service

PARIS, May 29—(INS)—On the battlefields of Europe eight memorial chapels and 11 monuments commemorate America's part in the World War.

And although they are on foreign soil they are, with the possible exception of the amphitheater at Arlington, America's largest and most beautiful war memorials. They range in size and design from the towering doric shaft on the hill of Montfaucon, to the simply effective monument near Ypres, with its low lines blending with the plains of Belgium.

The memorials were built under the direction of the American Battlefields commission in three historic localities on the western front where large numbers of American forces engaged in active combat. Gen. John J. Pershing was chairman of the commission. The localities are known as the Aisne-Marne, the Meuse-Argonne, and the St. Mihiel battlefields.

Perhaps the most impressive of American world war memorials is constructed near the Aisne River, France.

It was here American divisions were hurled into the line in the vicinity of Chateau-Thierry on May 27, 1918, to help stop the German advance toward Paris.

Of the 300,000 Americans taking part in the counter offensives, 64,000 were killed or wounded.

To commemorate the heroic action of the American troops in this engagement a large monument has been constructed, with twin rows of majestic square columns and a huge modernistic carving of an American eagle.

Nearby are two American military cemeteries. One, the Aisne-Marne, is located at the northern side of the historic hill 204, on which stands the famous Belleau Wood. The other, the Oise-Aisne, is near Fere-on-Tardenois, just north of the Ourcq River.

The St. Mihiel memorial marks the first operation of a complete American army as an independent unit in the world war, although this offensive did not begin until September, 1918, and was halted in two months by the armistice.

The circular doric colonnade, on as isolated hill, Montsec, can be seen for miles. Eight miles away, at Thiaucourt, is the third largest of the American military cemeteries in France, marked by a marble chapel.

The famous Champagne district, center of the last French drive, lies between Rheims and the Argonne forest. A monument to the activities of the American troops in this area stands on Blanc Mont, near Somme-Py.

An unique American war memorial is the Bellicourt monument, built over a section of the old St. Quentin canal, just north of the city of St. Quentin, in the region of the Somme. The canal flows through a historic tunnel used by the Germans in the Hindenburg line defenses.

The monument commemorates the activities of the American 27th and 30th Divisions, which went into the front line with the British army to attack the formidable Hindenburg line.

The Somme American cemetery is located at Bony. At its lower end a simple, effective chapel has been dedicated to those who sleep there.

There the first division went into line in April 1918, and a month later made the first American divisional attack of the war.

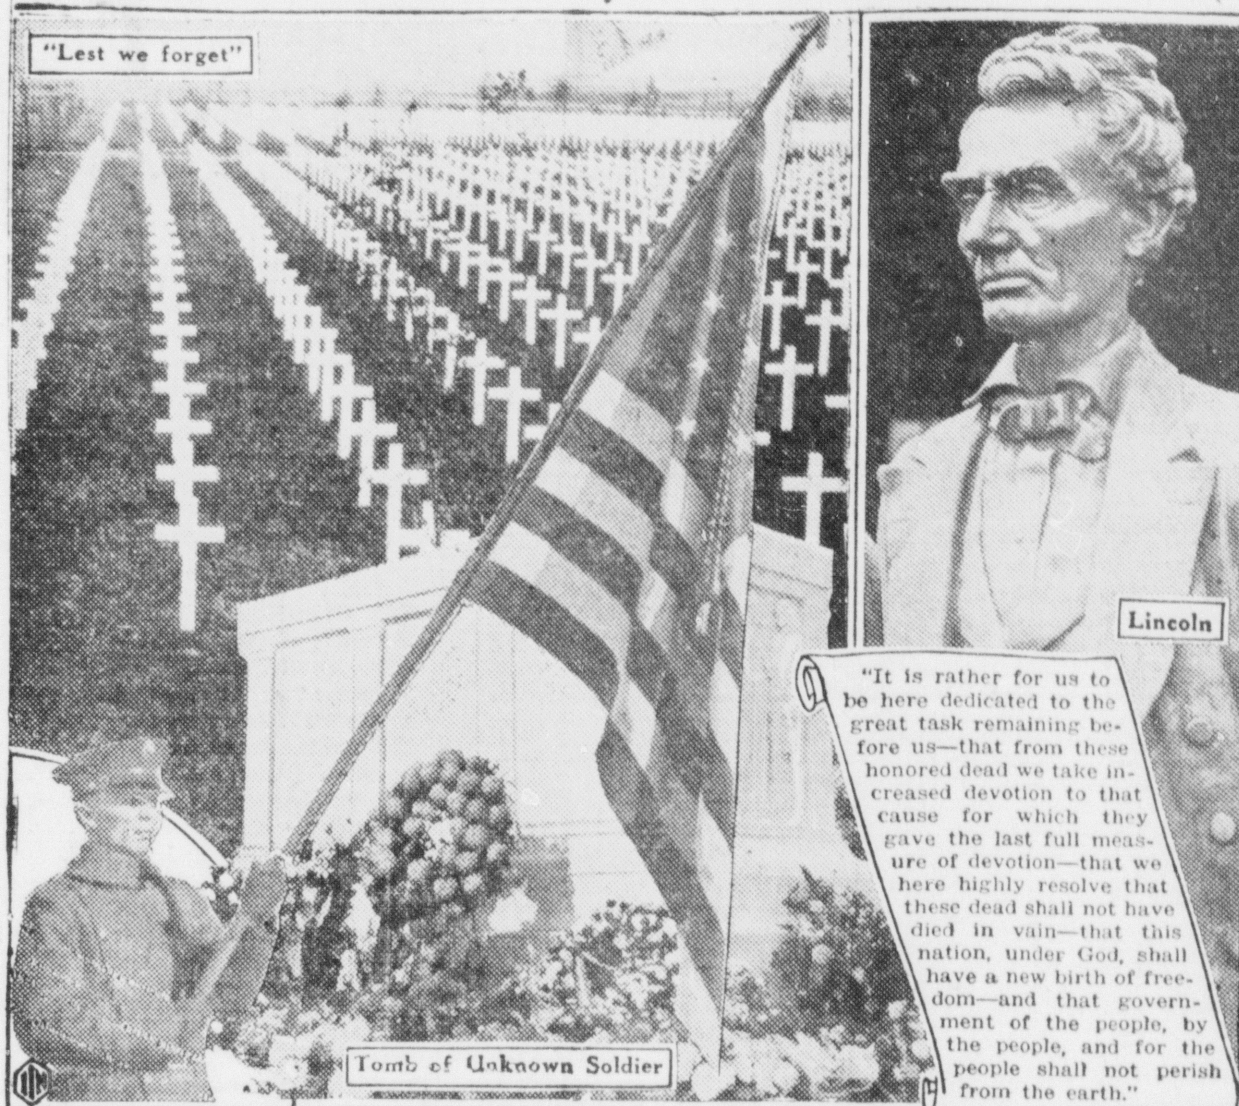

In the Meuse-Argonne, where our main body of troops was concentrated, was written the foremost chapter in American overseas military history. The battle which raged in this region from September 7th until the armistice, involved more than 900,000

America's Millions Pay Tribute to War Dead

Carrying on the tradition established 70 years ago at the close of the Civil War, America pauses to honor her war dead. In the spirit expressed by Abraham Lincoln in his immortal Gettysburg address, citizens throughout United States pay tribute to those who gave "the last full measure of devotion". The tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington at Washington, D. C., is the scene of impressive memorial rites in which high officialdom is taking part.

TO DISCUSS MORTGAGES AT THREE MEETINGS

F. H. A. Arranges Sessions For South Langhorne, Doylestown, Perkasie

INVITE ALL TO ATTEND

All-day sessions will be held Friday, May 31, and Saturday, June 1, in South Langhorne, Doylestown, and Perkasie, to acquaint property owners with procedure in obtaining an insured mortgage for new or existing dwellings under the Federal Housing Administration program.

All potential borrowers have been invited to these meetings, also contractors, supply men, bank officers and principals of local better housing campaigns.

The South Langhorne meetings will be held at Better Housing headquarters, East Bellevue avenue, with Philip Hickey and James Taylor, FHA field representatives in charge. The Doylestown meeting will be held in the headquarters at 58 West Court street, with Field Representatives R. T. Reilly and J. J. Doyle present. The Perkasie meetings will be held in the Postoffice Building, with Field Representatives J. J. Miller and Joseph A. May in charge.

Seven lending institutions in Bucks County have been authorized by the FHA to operate as approved mortgagees under terms of the National Housing Act, but thus far not one insured property mortgage loan has been made. The Solebury National Bank of New Hope, however, has notified the district office that it is prepared to invest $10,000 in insured mortgages on dwellings and seeks to place many of its present mortgage holdings on the amortized basis under the FHA plan.

Officials of all Bucks County institutions have been invited to a bankers meeting in the court house at Doylestown, Monday night, June 3, 7-8 p. m. J. Griffith Boardman, newly-appointed acting director of the Eastern Pennsylvania District, FHA, and Horace Palmer, Bucks County Better Housing chairman, will discuss the development of the insured-mortgage activities on this occasion. All inquiries from prospective borrowers recorded at the previous two-day sessions will be discussed in detail and turned over to the lending institutions for consideration.

Approved mortgagees in Eastern Pennsylvania already have allocated nearly $4,000,000 to the issuance of property mortgage loans which will be guaranteed by the United States Government. The State Workmen's Insurance Fund in Harrisburg is purchasing for investment $1,000,000 of FHA-insured loans in Pennsylvania, and the State Employees' Retirement System, with $600,000 of cash surplus available, also has become an approved mortgagee to participate in the insured loans program.

DISTRICT MEETING

Bristol Council, No. 58, Daughters of America, will journey to Philadelphia on June 6th, to attend a district meeting of Bucks No. 1, which will also be attended by the state councillor. All wishing to attend are asked to give their names to Mrs. Clara Bailey by Friday evening. Members of the degree team are asked to be present on Friday evening for final practice.

I earnestly request the co-operation of our citizens in aiding the Veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War and the great World War, so that they may, in a proper program, fittingly honor the memory of their deceased comrades and our honored dead.

SERVICE CLUBS HOLD INTER-CITY SESSION HERE

Fifth Meeting Marks Fourth Anniversary of Opening of River Bridge

SPEECHES AND SONGS

Marking the fourth anniversary of the opening of the Delaware River bridge, the Kiwanis Club and the Young Men's Club of Burlington and the Rotary and Exchange clubs of Bristol met in joint session here last night in the dining hall of the Presbyterian church. It was the fifth such occasion for the clubs which began joint sessions the year the bridge was opened or in 1931.

The visitors from Burlington were met at the Pennsylvania end of the span by the Bristol delegation. Escorted by Chief of Police Linford J. Jones, two members of the Pennsylvania Motor Patrol from South Langhorne and the American Legion Cadets, they were escorted to the church.

The cadets in their brilliant uniforms lined-up in front of the church and played a selection as the guests entered.

Nearly 150 men were seated at the tables decked with flowers and were served with dinner by the women of the Presbyterian church.

Burgess Clifford L. Anderson was toastmaster and in his usual genial manner extended greetings to the group. Toastmaster Anderson stated in his remarks that he regretted the affairs were not held more frequently so that the groups could get together oftener.

Mr. Anderson gave some figures concerning the Burlington-Bristol Delaware River Bridge, stating that the span was opened on May 2, 1931, and in the year ending May 1, 1935, approximately 227,000 vehicles passed over the bridge and about 11,000 pedestrians. Mr. Anderson told of his interest in the bridge and also of the interest manifested by his fellow franchiser, Joseph Cheesman, Burlington.

Heads of the various clubs were called upon for remarks and those responding were A. Davis Parker, Young Men's Club; Joseph Hammel, Kiwanis Club; Jacob C. Schmidt, Sr., Bristol Rotary, and Dr. Frank Lehman, Bristol Exchange Club. William Arensmeyer, president of the Bristol Exchange Club was unable to attend.

The Rev. Harry Ruth, St. Barnabas Episcopal Church, Burlington, invoked the blessing. Rev. Ruth is also a member of the Young Men's Club.

Brief remarks were also made by Norman Haac, district governor of the Exchange Club.

There were vocal selections by Mrs. Otto Grupp, Jr., Croydon, and Ernest Gamble, Langhorne. Mrs. Gamble and Keith Rosser were the accompanists. A male quartette composed of Percy G. Ford, C. Harry Bunting, Andrew MacArthur and A. McCarthy gave several songs.

MEMORIAL DAY MEMORIES

Memorial Day! And oh! the flood of memories.

Memories of the early observed the Union swept in long processions, when the boys who had sessions to the cities of the dead, to pay honors to the comrades who had gone on before.

Memories of the parades of bygone years—the ever shortening lines of marchers, the ever lengthening lines of mounds marking the resting places of those who had entered upon the last bivouac.

Memories of the Spanish war—of the Maine, of Dewey at Manila, of the rush to battle in Cuba and in the far-away Philippines. And later, the homecoming of the dead to sleep beside or near the heroes of the earlier conflicts.

Memories of the World war—of the boys who went cheering and singing through the streets on their way to the training camps, keeping step to the heart-quicken "Over There."

Memories of the long, heart-racking suspense and the fears after the boys had disembarked in France, and had gone forward to the battle lines.

Memories of the thrills that swept over the land as the cables and wires spread the news of the glorious deeds of our boys on the crimsoned battlefields.

Memories of the heartbreaks as the fateful telegrams brought tidings of the death of the neighbor's boy—or of the boy who was nearer and dearer.

Thus it is that as the heroes of the old wars pass away the heroes of the new battles fill the vacant places, and pay homage to the glorious dead who had served their country in its times of peril. And even when lasting peace comes to the world there will be men, and women, and children in every community, large and small, to perpetuate observance of Memorial Day in paying tribute to the nation's dead.

SINGING IN THE BATH

We see little to commend in the action of the London (Eng.) Observer which offers a prize for a "Song to Be Sung in the Bath." The effort to encourage the composition, and cause the general adoption, of an official bathtub song strikes us as a part of that deplorable modern tendency toward regimentation of life.

The chief virtue of songs sung in the bath is their spontaneity. They rise unbidden to the lips when immersion in the water induces a sense of well-being, and are a natural outpouring of joy. In words and sentiment they may, and usually do, have no reference to the bath, but only express the transcendental mood into which the bather has been cast.

A man must either improvise his song or warble some old familiar lay which springs to memory at the time and which, whatever its words and tunes, will enable him by the vigor and sincerity of his delivery to show forth the gladness that is in him. To provide him with a set piece would cramp his style. Would you tell a nightingale what to sing? A skylark?

Nothing else reconciles you to hateful people like the discovery that you can use them.

The world grows better in some ways. Those who are playing bridge can't recite poetry at you.

WHOSE WIFE? A CYRUS K. MANTEL MURDER MYSTERY

by CLADYS SHAW ERSKINE AND IVAN FIRTH

SYNOPSIS

Lawrence Vane, noted portrait painter, is held as a material witness in connection with the murder of his bride of three months following the discovery of a headless nude body upon the terrace of his penthouse apartment. Three weeks before that happened, two of his friends—Wilbur Renton and Roger Thornley—were discussing their love affairs and Vane's recent marriage to Isobel Mackenzie who was well known to both. Renton's interest in Isobel had caused a break between him and Betty Potter, a pretty young newspaperwoman, who lives in the apartment beneath the Lawrence Vane's. Thornley says that he and his wife, Millie, a former show-girl, are leaving for Seattle soon. Renton calls on Betty to plead his cause now, now that Isobel had married. She tells him that they cannot marry and reluctantly admits that she had been in love with Vane. Renton bitterly denounces Isobel, exclaiming that he'd like to choke her to death. Betty is horrified by his words. . . . Early the next morning, Wilbur Renton, denies that he had anything to do about notifying the police concerning the Vane murder, and is worried privately because he had called on Betty Potter so close to the scene of that homicide. Inspector Ingles persuades Betty to consult her uncle, Cyrus K. Mantel, famous detective. She does so, and he is starting her by what he already knows concerning last night's tragedy.

CHAPTER VIII

Again Cyrus K. Mantel shook the glasses at her angrily. "He knew," he said, "that Betty Potter would come plunging in here as early in the morning as possible, to try and get Cyrus K. to help that puppy Vane out of the mess he's got himself into. That's what he knew. So there, my dear!" "Oh, Uncle!" Betty gasped between laughter and tears. "You always know everything, even before a person knows it himself." She flared into an anger that matched his. "But don't you dare call Lawrence a puppy—don't you dare!" Suddenly an angelic smile spread over the Pac-nike features of Cyrus K. He carefully placed his glasses on his nose and beamed through them at his niece.

"How should I know what to call him?" he questioned equably. "I've never met the chap?" She went to him quickly and knelt down on the arm of his great chair. With the daring of a perched dove she ruffled his red hair, so like her own, save for the white streaks that now distinguished it.

"Uncle Cyrus," she begged, "you've got to help me . . . please no one else but you in all the world can do it. Please, Uncle Cyrus."

"No!" he shot back at her with all the force of a bullet. "No!" "Isn't there anything I can do, anything I can say that will make you change your mind? Please, Uncle Cyrus, please!" "No!" he repeated. "No!" "Of course, it's a very difficult case," she said shyly. "I suppose it's too much to ask. After all, my detective might fail . . . even you, I guess it's too much for anyone to take a chance on such a dreadfully hard case as this one."

She rose, as though defeated, from his chair, and bent over to kiss him good-bye.

He glared up at her out of black eyes, smaller twins to her own. "Who said so?" he shouted. "Who said so? Think you're clever, Miss. Well, get out of here. I'm busy. I'm busy as can be. I'm on the Vane murder case."

The first thing Cyrus K. Mantel did after shouting at his adored niece to "get out," was to remain seated quietly in his great armchair until he heard her high heels click across the polished surface of the hardwood floor in the hall below. He listened forward intently and he heard her voice as she said good-bye to the old butler. His face crinkled into a smile of pleasure as he noted the gay laughter with which Betty made some comment to the old man. Cyrus K. was content. Betty understood his supposed tantrums as well as he understood hers.

For a few moments longer he sat beside his desk. One who knew him well would have known that he was in deep and serious thought, for he had removed his pipe, and he was slowly and carefully stroking his right eyebrow with the rim. Suddenly he replaced them on his nose, and picked up the telephone at his elbow.

"Ingles?" Mantel went straight to the point. "Betty has just left my home. Sorry you didn't come in with her." He chuckled at the surprise and discomfort he knew the unseen man at the other end of the wire was feeling. "Can you meet me right away at the Tombs?" he continued. . . . "As soon as I can make it. . . . Good-bye!" He hung up and stared at the telephone for a moment, as though he expected the inebriate black mouthpiece to speak and tell him something of value. Then, with a little shake of his shoulders, he rose and left the room.

As Police Inspector Ingles and Cyrus K. Mantel met in the central office of the Tombs, the prison bell struck the hour of ten. The warden in charge mechanically went through the usual strict routine of checking them in. Then a guard took them through a series of heavy doors, carefully locking each one after the little group, as soon as they had passed through.

They walked down the corridor where the temporary prisoners are held—twitching drug addicts, and blowsy women of the town. A tall negro screamed at them as they passed, shrieking, and then went off into a drunken shrill singing of "De Glory Road."

Fastidiously, Cyrus K. stepped aside from these drags of humanity, and yet his brilliant black eyes looked at them with kindness and a depth of understanding. To Ingles it all meant just part of the day's work.

"Here y' are!" said the guard, and opened the door of a cell.

It would have been difficult for anyone to recognize the haggard man with the haunted blood-shot eyes, the well-groomed, gentle artist, Lawrence Vane. His proximity, for one night and half a morning, to the tragedy and squalor of the Tombs had deeply affected his sensitive nature.

He looked up at them as they entered, then dropped his head into his hands again, and crouched on the side of the prison cot in an attitude of utter dejection.

The guard closed the door on them and locked them in with the prisoner.

Ingles broke the silence. "Lawrence," he said in a strained voice. "I've brought you a friend."

"Friend?" Vane repeated bitterly from the shelter of his cupped hands. "Friend? I have no friends. He raised his head and looked Ingles straight in the eyes. "I used to call you by that name," he said quietly.

The Inspector flushed painfully, and for a moment his stern mouth quivered.

"All right, Lawrence," he said steadily. "I don't blame you for feeling that way. But let that pass. I have brought you a friend, and one who can help you."

Vane looked coldly at the dapper little figure standing beside the burly inspector.

"I do not know this gentleman," he said insolently.

Cyrus K.'s own particularly lovable smile flashed over his face. He bowed in stately old-world fashion. "That has been my very great loss," he said gently. The piteous look of a whipped dog, who has unexpectedly found a defender, came over Vane's face. He rose, and stood with all of his old graciousness.

"Thank you, sir," he said. "It is very kind of you to come to see—" bitterness tinged his voice again as he glanced at Ingles—"a jail-bird."

He finished.

"You are in error," Mantel corrected him gaily. "I came to see an artist whose work I have long admired."

An expression of pleasure lighted Vane's drawn features. "That's more than kind of you, sir," he said. For the first time his old-time gentle humor returned to him.

He nodded his head slowly. "A very important question," he repeated. The hunted look covered Vane's face again, veiling its temporary brightness.

"What is that question?" he asked cautiously.

"Do you know who I am?" "Why—why—I am amused and amused to see Vane's voice. "Why—no, sir!"

"Cyrus K. leaned back and shook his head in distress.

"Dear, dear," he murmured. "Of such thin fabric is the robe of fame made. Dear, dear!" He swung toward Ingles.

"Introduce me, Inspector," he ordered.

Ingles could not fathom the workings of the brain of this gray-headed little genius, but he was sure that whatever line of talk Mantel took, there was a definite motive back of it all. So, in spite of his heavy heart, he tried his best to enter into the lightness, which Mantel seemed desirous of maintaining in the conversation. These were not the heavy-handed police methods with which he was familiar. But he had implicit faith in Cyrus K. Mantel, and whatever method he chose to employ, would be the right one.

Glammily he tried to play the game.

"Lawrence Vane," he said smilingly, "may I have the honor to present to you the world-famous detective, Mr. Cyrus K. Mantel—Mr. Mantel, the world-famous artist, Mr. Lawrence Vane!"

Amusement dawned on Vane's face. "Cyrus K. Mantel?" He almost shouted the words. "Why, Mr. Mantel—I am honored and proud and happy to meet you. Aren't you, Betty Potter's uncle?"

"As I said before," sighed Mantel, "Cyrus K. is famous. As a young man, I acknowledge the inexperience. I am the uncle of that red-headed vision."

He studied the man beside him. "Do you know her?" he asked slowly.

Vane flushed. "Why, yes," he said. "Not well—I mean I've known her for a long time—but not well—you see I—"

"You know many women—well—do you not?" Cyrus K.'s voice had taken on an edge.

"Just what do you mean by that?" Vane's answer had fully as much edge to it as had the voice of his questioner.

"I mean exactly what I say, young man," snapped Mantel.

"I'm afraid I shall have to question your right to question me," said Vane arrogantly.

Cyrus K. slapped his knees soundly.

"Excellent," he beamed. "Excellent! I'm glad to see, my boy, that you still have plenty of pride and fighting spirit. Excellent!"

Vane relaxed, and his smile answered Mantel's, though somewhat uneasily.

"Mr. Vane," he said, for the first time calling him by name. "I'm sorry, but in order to expedite matters and enable me to accomplish my purpose in coming here, I shall have to ask you a few questions about the tragic happenings in your home last night."

"May I ask one question first?" Vane countered. Getting a quiet nod for answer, he continued, "What is your reason for coming here, Mr. Mantel?"

Through Mantel's mind flashed the picture of his lovely distressed niece, and her call upon him for help but a few hours before—and at the same time he honestly debated with himself as to what his real reason had been. For here was a case made to order for the peculiar powers of Cyrus K. Mantel—the sort of case that he loved. Just what had been his reason, he wondered—his niece or his name!

"My reason?" he repeated slowly. "My reason?" Again Betty's lovely face came before his mind's eye.

"To help you," he said gently.

For a tense moment the two men looked into each other's eyes—then Mantel held out his hand, and Vane grasped it.

"Thank you," he said simply. "I'll be glad to answer any questions I can, but I warn you that I know very little about it myself, with the exception of what my 'friend,' as he called me, told me, when he arrested me."

"Let's forget me," said Ingles brusquely, "and get down to business. You're in a bad hole, Lawrence, and unless you help us all you can, Mr. Mantel will not be able to do anything at all." He added under his breath, "And lord knows how little this can help on a surefire case like this, anyway."

"What happened last night?" asked Mantel.

EDGELY BRAVES KEEP ON LEAGUE LEADERS' HEELS

The Edgely Braves kept right on the heels of the Hulmeville A. A. team in the race for first half honors of the Lower Bucks County League by winning over the Bristol Hibernians in a close game at Edgely. A single by Frank Frankovic gave the Braves an 8-6 win over the Hibs.

Two were out at the time Frankovic decided to deliver the winning base knock. Mondo opened the inning by drawing a pass. Firce hit to Doughterty who errored. Hines fled out. Doughterty hit to Lyzack who forced Firce at second. J. Doughterty went to second unassisted. Frankovic singled to left, scoring Mondo and Doughterty with the winning runs.

"Billy" Thompson and "Eddie" Roe were the principal hitters of the fray. Thompson had a double and three singles to his credit while Roe slammed out a triple and double in three trips to the plate. Both teams made eight hits.

JUNIOR BALL LEAGUE OPENS SEASON TOMORROW

The Bristol Junior Baseball League will begin its second season tomorrow morning with two games being scheduled. On Leedom's field, the Jefferson A. C. will play the Harriman No. Names and on the Pine street field, the Catholic Boys' Club will meet the Pond A. C. Third Ward will be idle.

The circuit is open to all boys under seventeen years of age and was operated quite successfully last season. The Jefferson A. C. is the defending champion and is out to retain its crown. They beat the Harriman No. Names in the play-off last season.

Games will be played after school hours until the summer vacation and then will commence in the morning. A card party will be held in the near future to help defray the expenses of the league.

Officers of the league are: President, Arthur P. Brady; vice-president, Thomas M. Juho; secretary and treasurer, James A. Dolan.

HULMEVILLE KEEPS SCANT HOLD ON LEAGUE LEAD

Hulmeville A. A. maintained its narrow margin on first place in the Lower Bucks County League by scoring a 4-2 triumph over the Bristol A. A. team last night on Leedom's field. The match was a hurler's duel between "Spike" Tryon and "Stan" Carlen.

Carlen was the winning twirler although not quite so effective as Tryon. He was in danger in the closing innings and barely escaped being beaten in the fifth. Carlen gave up but three hits which was one less than Tryon but the support given the A. A. pitcher was miserable. Six errors were chalked up against the localites, two of these were marked up for the usually reliable "Walt" Forrest, center-fielder. Paul Barrett drove in both of Bristol's runs with a single in the sixth after Tryon had walked and Leinheiser reached base on an error.

BOESCH WILL BATTLE

GINO GARIBALDI TONIGHT

TRENTON, N. J., May 29—Paul Boesch, handsome Brooklynite, who for the past three years has been an outstanding favorite of local fandom, will make his second appearance in a windup at the Arena when he comes to grips with Gino Garibaldi, top-flight contender, in the last show of the present indoor season, Johnny Ipp announced.

Paul returned from the Pacific Coast where he met with uniform success and showed the fans a new Boesch, better, stronger and more agile. He evened his unlucky defeat at the hands of Joe Dusek by downing the more formidable members of the family, Rudy and Emil, both within the past ten days.

He will have to be on his toes every minute of the time he is in the ring with Garibaldi for the little Italian strikes with the quickness and fury of a rattlesnake. He is rated among the tops in the wrestling game. He is the only wrestler to defeat Al Bisignano this winter besides Little Wolf, O'Mahoney and Browning.

Of more than ordinary interest is the semi-windup between Bull Martin, Trenton grappler who made his greatest reputation in Canada and New England, and John Katan, rowdy Cane, This should be one of the roughest and wildest brawls ever contested here.

Another rough and tumble affair will bring together Pat McKay, Memphis Irishman, and Little Beaver, berserk Indian. Ed Mesko, who made a favorable impression last week, tangles with the popular Rube Wright.

Ipp stated that there is a heavy advance for the final show.

TO PLAY EXHIBITION GAME

St. Ann's A. A. will play an exhibition game tomorrow afternoon, meeting the Morrisville Reds on the Morrisville field. Game will begin at three o'clock.

only one or two degrees from those of the county, Mr. Tully's usually being slightly lower, whereas so many teachers mark so high that they "pull up" an extremely lower examination mark from the county office, thus giving the pupil a passing mark which he or she does not deserve, sending the student on to high school unprepared. "This is not so in Tullytown" added the speaker.

Decorations in the edifice were in white and gold, with bouquets of roses also used in the decorative scheme.

Exercises by the first grade pupils included recitations of up-to-date nursery rhymes, and songs by Louis Napoli and Emily Monti. Harmonica selections were given by a quartet, Patty Clay, Pauline Heller, Sonia Johnson, Jack Helble, and Patty Clay gave a solo on the harmonica, "Isle of Capri." A mandolin solo was given by Joseph Cardinali of the fifth grade.

Members of the Willet C. Sanford Post No. 453, American Legion, have completed plans for the observance of Memorial Day at Morrisville. A parade will be held in the morning, followed by exercises at the Morrisville Cemetery.

Past Commander Harry M. Lair will be marshal of the parade with Mayor Thomas R. Stockham, honorary marshal. The line will form at the Willet E. Case school on West Bridge street and will move at 9 o'clock. The route of the parade will be east on Bridge street to Pennsylvania avenue to Trenton avenue; east on Trenton avenue to North Delmor avenue; south on Delmor avenue to Bridge street; west on Bridge street to Washington street; south on Washington street to Delaware avenue; west on Delaware avenue to South Pennsylvania avenue; south on Pennsylvania avenue to the cemetery.

The exercises, which will be held in the cemetery, will be in charge of Commander J. Milnor Wildman, who will conduct the American Legion Memorial Day service. He will be assisted by Chaplain George Bleasdale.

The Rev. William R. Ridington, pastor of the Methodist Church, will give the opening prayer, and the Rev. Oliver E. Newton, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, the closing prayer.

Pupils of the public schools will give Lincoln's Gettysburg address and Flanders Field. A salute will be fired by the firing squad of the Legion.

Music for the parade will be furnished by the high school band and the Junior Legion bugle corps. Those who will participate in the parade will include the American Legion, American Legion Auxiliary, Junior Legion, fire companies and auxiliaries, Red Cross, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, school children, lodges and other civic organizations.

A committee from the local Post, composed of James Morrissey and John Gear, will place flags and flowers upon the graves of the soldiers who are buried in the Morrisville or Fallington cemeteries.

eral numbers. An orchestra furnished music during the evening.

J. Leslie Kilcoyne, Esq., was the speaker of the evening and he spoke in a felicitous manner during which he introduced to the assembled group Chief Jones, the highway patrolman, Justice of Peace Edward Lynn and Dr. J. Fred Wagner. Then Mr. Kilcoyne gave an outline of the procedure in criminal law and explained how criminal law is administered in Pennsylvania. He cited the procedure in a mythical homicide case.

The evening was one of sociability and the groups fraternized in a most cordial manner and friendly spirit. It was demonstrated that the words of Burgess Anderson were true when he remarked "We are separated by a river over which a bridge has been erected and which has bound us together as brothers and next door neighbors."

At the conclusion of the affair Edward Lynn entertained the groups at the Grand Theatre.
